In many cases, details which are said to have been accurate "are not the kind that can easily be checked later" Blackmore, "Dying" Even the 'founding father' of near-death studies,

Raymond Moody, concedes that most cases of alleged veridical perception during NDEs are found well after the fact and are usually attested to only by the NDEr and perhaps a few friends. And in one study Carlos Alvarado found that although nearly one-fifth of participants claimed to have made "verifiable observations" during their OBEs, only 3 of the 61 cases even "qualified as potentially veridical when experiencers were asked to provide fuller descriptions." Alvarado, Susan Blackmore and Tillman Rodabough consider at length how accurate information can be incorporated into realistic out-of-body imagery during NDEs.

Delight in the Dark: Romance Novel

Its central character, Harvey Birch, the American spycool, brave, incorruptible, quick in resource in times of peril, is a noble example of that homely heroism in the portrayal of which Cooper excelled. It is the only example we have of this form, as Bastiat seemed to prefer shorter and funnier essays which were less complex in structure.
