From time immemorial, man has sought to retain water, divert it, or protect itself from it, whether it is to sail, to increase agricultural surfaces or to build, to use the driving force of water. Yet all the favorable conditions that China enjoyed in would have been insufficient to transform the huge, chaotic civilization into a modern nation without a strong and able leader who could hold the country together while providing strategic direction. Wenn man lange am Fenster lauschte, konnte man aus der dunklen Weite des Grunewalds auch die Antwort vernehmen.
