Posted 03 December - AM Conclusion From sums up this entire discussion quite well: The Preterist finds only the contemporary meaning [at the time of the writer] of the Revelation as applicable to the early church, and the Futurist sees the prophecy as projected into a remote age to come, but the Historicist sees that the Revelation had its function first in counseling and encouraging the early Christians in the vicissitudes through which they were passing, while at the same time extending its prophetic pictures beyond their range of vision to the final victory. In this revelation, we see that Joseph Smith was guided to think in terms of the much more difficult to interpret, multiple fulfillments of prophecy instead of the single check box approach that William Miller had used to interpret the meteor storm.
